Agile development focuses on collaborative programming to solve problems that can't be fully defined from the beginning. The team of developers must have good communication with each other and the client in order to meet the dynamic needs of the customer. This differs from the waterfall approach since, in the waterfall approach, the developer must complete each step in order and cannot move on until each step is completed. The agile approach is more flexible.